

Nimsoft CEO: No Sign Of A Slowdown Yet

Posted April 1st, 2008 by Joe Panettieri

Managed service providers can breathe a collective sigh of relief. The first quarter ended yesterday, and MSP platform providers generally sound upbeat about the industry's health.

One prime example: In his personal blog, Nimsoft CEO Gary Read says his company has had another strong quarter. Plus, he throws in this important line:

"We're not seeing any economic weakness yet..."

In his April 1 blog entry, Read goes on to say that Nimsoft has hired a new VP of marketing, and that a big company announcement will be made on April 8.

Interesting. Read certainly knows how to tease readers with his blog, and keep them coming back for more clues.

But more importantly, he's the latest MSP platform CEO to suggest that the managed services market performed well in Q1. The top executives at Autotask and N-able have made similar statements in recent weeks, especially as they seek to fill new positions.

Here's a link to Read's entire April 1 blog entry.

<http://www.mspmentor.net/2008/04/01/nimsoft-ceo-no-sign-of-a-slowdown-yet/>